MUD GEYSER, NORRIS GEYSER BASIN, YELLOWSTONE PARK.

This geyser is one of the galaxy of the Mud drama which cuts much of a figure in Yellowstone Park. It is of a rounded or oval shape with a ridge-like, corrugated surface. When in eruption it is an object of much interest. The geyser is an irregular one.

THE UPPER FALL, YELLOWSTONE PARK.

The Upper Fall is 109 feet high. It breaks over the rocky ledge in wild abandon and glee and with a roar heard some distance away. From across the Chittenden Bridge it is seen in its entirety as it strikes the bottom with heavy impact. A lovely waterfall!

The "Hoo-doods," overturned, topsyturvy rocks, are one of the strangest formations of the Park. They cover an area of about one square mile. The roadway makes an abrupt turn between great blocks of limestone, that rise fully seventy feet, to which the name "Silver Gate" is aptly applied.
